Slow learners vs fast learners

Fast learners and slow learners are terms used to describe individuals' different abilities to process information. Possible causes of this difference are discussed in terms of the literature on learning and metacognitive strategies. - Slow learners will achieve mastery over time, but their learning pace may be slower compared to fast learners.

Fast learners

- Fast learners have the ability to grasp new concepts quickly and easily.
- Fast learners can visualize things.
- They often demonstrate a high level of comprehension and can find ways to apply their knowledge effectively.

- Fast learners may require less repetition and practice to understand and retain information.
- They are learning by doing and not afraid to say “I don’t know”

Slow learners

- Slow learners may take more time and effort to understand new concepts and information. –
- They may require additional repetition, practice, or personalized instruction to fully grasp the material. –
- While doing a conversation, they struggle to express their points.
- They try to learn, but they never seem to remember what they learn, and they have trouble following complicated instructions.
- Their self-esteem is very low, and they need support and encouragement to stay motivated.
- Their focus span is very lesser and do not have long-term objectives.

Remedies for slow learners

- Our first responsibility is to build up confidence amongst these learners and taking extra classes to these students (remedial classes).

Details of Remedial Classes

Students who face difficulty grasping topics in a classroom are given different educational strategies like refined practice, repetition of content, and clarification. Whereas, in some cases, individual attention is provided so that the topic is easily picked up by the student. Remedial educators use the necessary instructional techniques to help students overcome any learning obstacles and achieve their full potential.

A remedial educator can assist the students by teaching the fundamentals of reading, written language, math, and study/organizational skills using innovative, multisensory approaches and practices. It has been demonstrated that using these strategies can improve student learning. If they are taught using such plans and techniques, students are taught to make use of their strengths, talents, and abilities while also overcoming their weaknesses.

The following activities are taken in the remedial classes:

1. Remedial Reading Methods
2. Encouraging Daily Reading
3. Concentrating on Comprehension
4. The remedial class includes short and long term instructional goals learning steps, exercises, and evaluations to ensure that the curriculum is implemented.
5. Special classes are taken
6. Provided extra assignments
7. Moral support to students

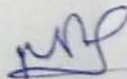

Identification of slow learners

- Low level of comprehension
- Poor memorization potential
- Failure to understand instructions and implement them
- Lack of motivation towards learning
- Need additional time to complete certain task(s)
- Inability to understand complex concepts
- Difficulties in problem-solving
- Low self-assurance with minimum self-expectations
